[The following is an excerpt of an email sent on September 21, 2005 by John Wookey, Oracle's Senior Vice President, Applications, to Oracle's CRM employees relating to the proposed Siebel acquisition]

First, a word to the Oracle, PeopleSoft and JD Edwards CRM teams. This agreement to purchase more CRM technology shows how committed we are to CRM. You've built some very good products, and more than 1,000 CRM customers made the decision to buy our applications. There's Lufthansa and a number of other marquee customers who are counting on us to continue to push our CRM products forward. This will be a great opportunity for you to help Oracle CRM go to the next level. So how does this agreement to purchase Siebel fit our Applications strategy?

1. We will protect and grow our installed base in the current generation applications. After the transaction closes, Oracle will gain 4,000 Applications customers from the most successful CRM company in the business and move us closer to our goal of being No. 1 in Applications globally. 2. We will continue to extend into industry-specific areas. It's why we invested in Retek and i-flex. It's why we continue to push our own overall industry solutions such as higher education, life sciences and healthcare. It's why Siebel is so attractive. It has a great deal of industry expertise—expertise that enhances great CRM. As our software plays a more critical role with industry customers (as it has with manufacturing to date), Oracle will become a much more significant vendor. 3. We will lead the next generation of applications with Project Fusion. Siebel has a similar Fusion-like project under way called Nexus. Some of its technology, from both a platform and functionality perspective, will help us build better next-generation applications after the transaction closes.

It will be business as usual here at Oracle because the acquisition isn't expected to close until early 2006. If anyone missed the news, here's the announcement in Oracle's In The Know, and the email Charles Phillips sent to the company.

The transaction is subject to regulatory and other approvals. In the E.U., this transaction will be subject to regulatory clearances and approvals and be conducted in accordance with the information and consultation requirements of applicable E.U. directives and their implementation in the individual member states.
