The benefits to Towers Watson shareholders are clear: This merger is the right deal with the right partner to drive significant shareholder value.

The Towers Watson Board of Directors urges shareholders to vote FOR the transaction at our upcoming meeting on November 18, 2015

Unique opportunity to accelerate TW's long-term growth strategy

Right management team in place to execute on the integration and strategic plan

Clear, compelling synergies

Result of extensive evaluation and negotiation by an engaged,

independent board

Exchange ratio that is favorable to TW shareholders

3

Unique Opportunity to Accelerate Long-Term Strategy

Acceleration of TW's existing long-term strategy

Increased penetration in growth / emerging markets

Higher percentage of products / solutions

Stronger platform for innovation

Expanded direct access to Willis' leading U.S.

middle-market client base

Supports TW's goal of capturing a 25% share of the growing active employee exchange market

Expanded client reach provides opportunity to realize growth across other areas, such as large market P&C brokerage and Global Health and Group Benefits
Global platform across 120+ countries, expanding TW's reach by 80+ countries

Leverages Willis' strong relationships with large companies internationally
Optimal mix of client offerings, with higher percentage of solutions

The transaction creates a comprehensive portfolio of advisory services, solutions and technology
Brings together the top industry talent while enhancing our ability to invest in innovation

Towers Watson merger is an excellent strategic move by both companies.
Willis has the country's most extensive broker distribution network concentrating on small and mid-sized organizations in the country.

[W]e believe the strategic rationale underpinning the proposed merger is sound. We believe the merger would enhance the overall competitive position of the companies, improve their ability to serve a broader range of clients, create an extensive offering of products and solutions and establish a stronger platform for growth and future investments.

We believe the combination of the two firms will create strong long-term strategic value that outpaces what either firm on a standalone basis can achieve, including generation of material revenue, cost and tax synergies.

Projected to Generate Substantial Growth and Shareholder Value

Merger expected to generate $4.7 billion in value from highly-achievable synergies

Clearly identified cost, revenue and tax synergies

$375 -

$675 million in revenue synergy opportunity

$100 -

$125 million in clearly defined cost synergies

Maintain Irish domicile; achieve effective tax rate in mid-20 percent range vs. current mid-30 percent range ($75 million estimated impact)

Synergy estimates are a result of deep diligence by TW, Willis, and third-party consultants based on our detailed understanding of the businesses Substantially accretive to TW shareholders

Cash Net Income accretion expected to be >25% for CY 2016 and increase to 45% for CY 2018

We believe the pending merger with Willis has the potential to unlock significant shareholder value, including an accelerated adoption curve for private exchange solutions leveraging channel synergies from Willis' middle market strength. Additionally, we identify strategic value from the combination in the form of enhanced TW international growth and expanded Willis U.S. P&C growth. We

$125M

in

cost

$75M

Acquisition cost synergies are probably understated by $50M-$75M.

No one has questioned the wisdom of making Towers' CEO the head of the combined entity. In fact, several equity analysts have praised Haley's acquisition track record

noting that the market has at first underestimated certain transactions he has overseen.

ISS

November 5, 2015

Over the 15 years we have followed TW there have been a number of acquisitions that CEO John Haley has stewarded that were initially underappreciated -- including the key Towers Perrin merger and Extend

Towers Watson management has an appropriate perspective on the value that will emerge at Willis as it executes on its Operational Improvement Program. The market clearly didn't see this in the immediate aftermath of the announcement, but it reflects good long-term thinking.

The Willis merger represents a catalyst for upside in exchange revenue growth given increased penetration of the middle market channel.

Additionally, we expect the deal to generate run-rate pre-tax cost synergies of $125M and tax synergies of $60M. Finally, we believe Towers management team can bring enhanced execution to Willis, driving a positive turnaround in the insurance business.

Transaction was a Result of a Thorough, Independent Process

Extensive Evaluation by an Engaged, Independent Board

Independent Directors played a significant role in evaluating the transaction and oversaw multiple meetings and executive sessions throughout the evaluation and negotiation process

Board extensively reviewed the assumptions underlying the value-creation thesis of the Willis transaction, including internal and external perspectives on revenue, cost and tax synergies

Board considered alternative transaction structures, but determined that the merger-of-equals structure was the optimal way to leverage the strengths of both businesses

No market check was run due to Board, management and advisor judgment regarding lack of strategic interest, which has been validated post-announcement given that no other interested party has indicated

interest or submitted a proposal

Board concluded the potential value of the combined company is more compelling than standalone plan, since it provides a unique opportunity for TW to benefit from the upside created through broadened product offerings, client reach, and geographic scope

In our opinion, the proposed merger is the result of a thorough review of strategic alternatives. Towers Watson's evaluation of a potential combination with Willis involved various members of management, independent directors and external business, financial and legal advisors, all of whom assessed aspects of the potential value creation opportunities, the cultural compatibility and the strategic and financial implications of the proposed transaction.
