Methanex Provides Update on Natural Gas Supply for Chile Plants

Methanex advises that production from its Chile plants has been reduced further due to temporary curtailments of natural gas from Argentina as a result of a labour dispute affecting one natural gas supplier and technical testing done by another Argentinean gas supplier. Methanex has not been receiving all its natural gas due to technical issues and Argentinean reinjection orders. In order to optimize the utilization of natural gas Methanex had been operating three of its four plants since May 4, 2007 but is currently operating only one plant, pending restoration of gas supplies from Argentina. Gas supply is expected to improve over the next week and the company is planning to return to operating three plants shortly.

Production from our Chile operation from April 1, 2007 to June 10, 2007 was 520,000 tonnes compared to production capacity of 740,000 tonnes.

Bruce Aitken, President and CEO of Methanex, commented, "While we are disappointed with the level of production from our Chile operation, we are very pleased with the Chilean Government's initiative to open the exploration and development of natural gas in Southern Chile to the private sector which was announced on June 8, 2007. We believe there is considerable potential to develop natural gas supplies for our Chile production hub and are aware of several international oil and gas companies that are interested in participating in the program. Programs like this provide us with confidence that we will find solutions to the natural gas supply challenges we face at our Chile operations.
