Talking About Our Business - Honoring Monsanto's Achievements
- 2002 August 12

To All Pharmacia Corporation People Worldwide

Dear Colleagues,

Tomorrow marks a major milestone in the evolution of our organization and in the history of biotechnology.

Tomorrow, our Monsanto subsidiary becomes a fully independent, stand-alone company. This action is being carried out as a "spin-off" of Pharmacia's Monsanto shares as a dividend to Pharmacia shareholders.

Past and present people of the new Monsanto and all their predecessors can feel very proud of this milestone. We at Pharmacia can share some of this pride.

Over the past decade or so, Monsanto's agricultural business has been implementing a bold decision to transform a conventional agricultural chemicals company into the world leader in agricultural biotechnology.

This transformation, built upon the development of genetically modified seeds, has brought great controversy. Largely because of a lack of understanding of the basic science that Monsanto is applying, many people have been fearful of this new biotechnology. Numerous special interest groups have played on this fear for their own ends.

Although the controversy has been intense at times, the Monsanto team held true to its vision. That vision has been the responsible use of science to create food and other crops that improve productivity and human health, that are better for the environment, and that make more and better food available to people around the world.

Thanks to the innovations from Monsanto, crops are now being planted that reduce soil erosion, reduce the need for herbicides and pesticides, and increase yields of food crops, including in some of the poorest regions of our globe. Other important advances are in development, including crops that may improve heart health and which can grow in previously uncultivated dry or salty soil. In the longer run, people from both the developed and developing countries will derive great benefits from Monsanto's industry-leading work.

Driving Monsanto's achievements have been the three characteristics that we share and which are behind the success of every great vision: Passion, courage and tenacity. All of us at Pharmacia can admire and learn from the example our Monsanto colleagues have set.

As Monsanto begins this important new chapter in its history, please join me in honoring these achievements and in continuing to support the enormously important work that the people of Monsanto will be undertaking in the future. We will watch their progress with pride.

Soon, Pfizer will be filing a registration statement with the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) that includes a draft joint proxy statement/prospectus that sets out relevant facts about the acquisition, including the business strategy behind the acquisition and the process leading up to Board of Directors approval. The SEC may review the filing and make comments that we would then need to address before the SEC declares the document effective. Once declared effective, we will print the proxy statement and mail it to shareholders prior to a special shareholder meeting to vote on approving the transaction.

Although many of us would prefer to continue with Pharmacia as we know it today, and do not believe that any compensation or benefits would be a satisfactory substitute, the Pharmacia Board took the appropriate actions to provide customary transition protections and compensation following the acquisition.

The draft prospectus/proxy statement included in tomorrow's SEC filing contains related information on Pharmacia compensation and benefits. There may be the usual speculation in local media about some of this information, and it is important to put this in context. Our compensation programs were designed to attract and retain top talent. Those programs were very successful. We should be mindful that we go into this transaction as one of the most dynamic, financially sound and best-managed companies in the world.

We know that for many of our people, now is a time for holidays and vacation with family and friends. For those of you who are taking well-deserved time off now and in the coming weeks, we wish you relaxation and reinvigoration. And once again, thank you for all your great work that is keeping Pharmacia strong.

Sincerely,

Fred Hassan
Chairman and Chief Executive Officer
